Bitcoin fell 1.9% to $81,711 and Ethereum fell 3.8% to $2,474 across all five major exchanges (Binance, OKX, Bybit, Bitget, Gate), with prices moving in tight agreement. Binance led volume at $18.0 billion in Bitcoin perps and $14.2 billion in Ethereum perps.

02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way. Top L/S is the ratio among the largest traders. Taker B/S is the buy-to-sell ratio of market orders.

Funding, open interest and mark price are point-in-time (as of 00:00 UTC), not daily figures.

Bitcoin traders held a modest long lean on Binance (1.69:1 long-short ratio among all accounts, 1.62:1 among top traders), but selling dominated—the taker buy-sell ratio was 0.93, indicating slightly more aggressive selling. Ethereum showed stronger conviction for higher prices (3.38:1 long-short) but sharper selling pressure (0.85 taker ratio). Funding rates diverged sharply across venues: Bitget's Bitcoin rate sat at 10.95% annualized (highest), attracting short-sellers to collect fees from longs, while Binance's was only 1.93%; Ethereum funding turned deeply negative on OKX (−5.5%) and Binance (−1.6%), rewarding shorts. Open interest in Ethereum fell 6.4%, signaling deleveraging. Most critically, only 20.7% of Binance perpetuals were up—the broadest risk-off signal, with money fleeing nearly every position.

THE THREE THAT MATTERED MOST

Bitcoin ETFs suffer biggest exodus since June as Uptober turns red

US spot Bitcoin ETFs saw $484.9 million in net outflows on October 8, the steepest daily withdrawal in over three months. The exodus erased gains from October's first four trading days, with BlackRock's IBIT (–$207.7M), Fidelity's FBTC (–$105.1M), and ARK's ARKB (–$101.7M) leading the withdrawals.

U.S. government moves $1 billion in bitcoin tied to Bitfinex hack, with no sign of sale

The US government transferred 12,267 BTC worth approximately $1.01 billion from a wallet holding seized funds from the 2016 Bitfinex hack. The transfer went to unlabeled wallets, not to an exchange, indicating movement into strategic storage rather than a liquidation sale. A March 2025 executive order mandates seized Bitcoin go to the Strategic Bitcoin Reserve, not be sold.

Fed's Waller signals additional rate hikes needed despite ongoing battle with inflation

Federal Reserve Governor Christopher Waller spoke at the Istanbul Economic Forum at 08:30 UTC, stating that additional rate hikes would be needed to support a 'timelier return of inflation to our 2% goal.' His remarks came as Fed policy expectations shifted toward less accommodation, with traders interpreting the comments as hawkish guidance that alarmed risk assets including crypto. The speech directly preceded the day's sharp market selloff.

ETF FLOWS

Bitcoin spot ETFs recorded $484.9 million in net outflows on October 8, the largest daily exodus since June 25, 2026. BlackRock IBIT led withdrawals with $207.7 million out, followed by Fidelity FBTC ($105.1M out), ARK 21Shares ARKB ($101.7M out), Grayscale GBTC ($39.3M out), and Bitwise BITB ($27.8M out). This single day erased all net inflows from October 1–4. Ethereum ETF flows for October 8 specifically were not separately delineated in available sources, but the asset had recorded significant outflows on October 6 ($201.9M) and October 7 ($160.9M), continuing a streak that began September 29.

Every term used today, in plain words

Funding rate — A periodic fee (usually paid every 8 hours) between traders betting prices go up (longs) and traders betting prices go down (shorts). When funding is positive and high (e.g., 10.95% annualized), longs pay shorts, signaling bullish sentiment and attracting shorters. When negative (e.g., -5.5%), shorts pay longs, signaling bearish sentiment.

Liquidation — When a trader's leveraged position is automatically closed by the exchange because losses exceed their collateral. Liquidations are forced sales that occur rapidly and can push prices down further.

Long-short ratio — The ratio of traders betting prices will go up (longs) versus traders betting prices will go down (shorts). A ratio of 1.69:1 means there are 1.69 long positions for every short position—a bullish lean. A ratio below 1.0 indicates more shorts than longs (bearish lean).

Mark price — The official price on a futures exchange used to calculate profit/loss and determine liquidations. It is typically derived from spot price and adjusted by funding to prevent manipulation of the closing price.

Market breadth — The percentage of cryptocurrencies in a market (by count) that rose in value during the day. When only 20.7% of perpetuals were up, it means 79.3% fell or stayed flat—a broad, risk-off signal.

Open interest — The total amount of capital currently locked in leveraged bets (longs and shorts combined) in a market. Rising open interest means more money is entering bets; falling open interest means traders are closing positions and removing money.

Open-interest change — The percentage increase or decrease in total open interest from the start of a day to the end. A -6.4% change means 6.4% of the capital in leveraged bets was withdrawn, signaling deleveraging and reduced conviction.

Strategic Bitcoin Reserve — A U.S. government program (established by executive order) that holds seized and forfeited Bitcoin indefinitely as a strategic asset rather than selling it. The reserve acts as a long-term store of value similar to gold reserves.

Taker buy-sell ratio — A measure of buying versus selling pressure among traders who take immediate deals at current prices. A ratio of 0.93 means slightly more aggressive selling; a ratio above 1.0 means more aggressive buying.

Top-trader long-short ratio — The ratio of long versus short positions among the largest account holders only. This is often used as a proxy for 'smart money' positioning, as the biggest players typically have better information.

Uptober — Informal nickname for October, reflecting Bitcoin's and crypto's historically strong seasonal performance in that month. The term gained popularity as traders watched for expected October gains after weak Septembers.
