02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way.

Funding rates were mixed: Bybit's Bitcoin rate stood at an elevated 9.99% annually, but Binance's turned negative (-0.12%), signaling traders disagreed on bullish conviction. On Binance's Bitcoin futures, open interest fell 2.74%, indicating some position unwinding. Across most venues, long-to-short ratios favored shorts (Binance 0.904, OKX 0.96 on Bitcoin), reflecting cautious sentiment overall.

— 07 · GLOSSARY

Every term used today, in plain words

Basis — The difference between the futures price and the spot price of an asset. A positive basis means futures trade above spot; used to measure if traders are betting prices will rise.

ETF — Exchange-traded fund—a fund that tracks an asset (like Bitcoin or Ethereum) and can be bought and sold on a stock exchange. Spot ETFs hold the actual asset, not derivatives.

ETF flow — The net amount of money flowing into or out of an ETF on a given day. Inflows suggest demand for the asset; outflows suggest investors are selling.

Funding rate — A periodic payment between traders on perpetual contracts. When funding is positive, long traders (those betting on price up) pay short traders (those betting on price down), signaling bullish conviction. Negative funding means shorts pay longs.

Liquidation — Forced closing of a leveraged position when the loss reaches a preset limit. Liquidations can cascade and create sudden price spikes or drops.

Long-short ratio — The proportion of traders betting prices will go up (long) versus those betting prices will go down (short) on a given contract. A ratio below 1.0 means more shorts than longs (bearish); above 1.0 means more longs (bullish).

Mark price — The price used to calculate profits and losses on derivatives contracts at any given moment. It is typically the average of the last traded price, the current price, and a volatility-adjusted fair-value estimate.

Open interest — The total number of open positions (contracts not yet closed) on a futures exchange. Rising open interest suggests new money entering; falling open interest suggests traders are closing positions.

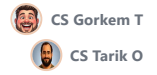

Open-interest change — The percentage change in open interest over a time period. A negative change means positions are being closed or liquidated; a positive change means new positions are being opened.

Perpetual (or perp) — A futures contract with no expiration date. Traders can hold perpetuals indefinitely as long as they maintain enough margin (collateral). Most crypto derivative volume occurs on perpetuals.

Stablecoin — A cryptocurrency designed to maintain a stable value, typically pegged to the US dollar or another reference asset. USDC and USDT are examples.

Tokenized deposit — A digital representation of a traditional bank deposit recorded on a blockchain, allowing instant settlement and programmable payments. From a legal standpoint, it is equivalent to holding cash in the bank.

Volume — The total dollar value of trades executed on an exchange or contract in a given period. Higher volume generally indicates more liquidity and confidence in price discovery.
