STRONG BULLISH

2026-10-11 00:00–23:59 UTC · all times UTC · data from Binance, Bybit, OKX, Bitget, Gate + Twelve Data

THE DAY IN ONE LINE

Bitcoin and Ethereum each rose less than 1% on October 11 as traders bet bullish but funding rates split sharply across exchanges, while Ethereum funds bled money for a ninth straight day and smaller coins surged on volume without clear catalysts.

Bitcoin closed at 83,715–83,735 across major exchanges, up 0.93–0.95% from open. Ethereum closed near 2,535, up 1.23–1.24%. Binance led volume for both: Bitcoin at 5.1 billion USD, Ethereum at 4.5 billion USD.

02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way. Top L/S is the ratio among the largest traders. Taker B/S is the buy-to-sell ratio of market orders.

Gate	+0.9%	$2.02B	—	—	—	—	$2,534.96

Funding, open interest and mark price are point-in-time (as of 00:00 UTC), not daily figures.

Traders favored long positions (bets on higher prices): Bitcoin's ratio of long to short bets on Binance was 1.48, and Ethereum's was 3.01—very bullish. But funding rates (the cost to hold those bets) contradicted this signal and split across exchanges. Bybit charged 10.95% annually for both coins (extremely high), signaling bulls worried about reversals; Binance charged only 0.6% for Bitcoin and 1.6% for Ethereum; OKX actually paid longs (negative rates of -1.2% for Bitcoin, -2.2% for Ethereum). The taker buy-sell ratio was near 0.97 for both coins, meaning slightly more aggressive selling despite bullish longs. Open interest (total bets) fell slightly on Binance (Bitcoin down 1.89%, Ethereum down 0.45%). Market breadth was positive: 67.6% of all Binance perpetual contracts rose, showing general strength. The picture: traders believed prices would go up, but they disagreed on conviction and accepted less leverage, and some capital moved to cash.

THE THREE THAT MATTERED MOST

XRP Ledger patches critical decade-old bug that could have minted 18.45 trillion XRP

A security overflow bug in the XRP Ledger's payment engine could have allowed an attacker to mint spendable XRP far beyond the 100 billion token supply cap in a single transaction. RippleX fixed the flaw on September 25 with no evidence it was ever exploited in the wild. An AI security firm found the bug and received the maximum 250,000 USD bounty.

Ledger hardware wallets found with hidden implants; supply-chain attack spreads to EU

Ledger users discovered unauthorized hardware implants inside tampered wallet devices, including cellular transmitters that captured 24-word recovery phrases and transmitted them to attackers. The attack was isolated to a single reseller (MediaMarkt in Europe) with estimated losses exceeding 86 million USD. Devices passed all standard authenticity checks because the main security chip was untouched.

Starknet developers signal Layer 1 independence; STRK surges 59% on quantum-security ambitions

Starknet, a major Ethereum Layer 2, announced it is actively considering a transition to an independent Layer 1 blockchain with plans to achieve full quantum resistance by 2027. The move would free Starknet from Ethereum's constraints and align it with post-quantum security standards. STRK token surged 59% to 0.1192 USD on the announcement.

INSTITUTIONAL FLOWS AND ETFS

Bitcoin ETFs post modest 21.1 million USD inflows; Ethereum fund outflows extend to 9 straight days

US spot Bitcoin ETFs recorded 21.1 million USD in net inflows on October 9 (latest reported date), the most recent positive session. Ethereum ETFs, by contrast, posted their ninth consecutive day of outflows with over 700 million USD total drained since late September. The divergence shows institutional capital rotating away from Ethereum into Bitcoin or alternative assets.

Optimism adds Uniswap's Unichain to its L2 operating portfolio, raising chain-consolidation concerns

Optimism announced it will operate Uniswap's upcoming Unichain alongside other chains it manages. Critics raised concerns that concentrating multiple chain operations under one company creates a single point of failure and reduces decentralization, though Ethereum fallback routes remain independent per chain design.

07 · GLOSSARY

Every term used today, in plain words

Basis — The difference between the mark price and the spot price of an asset. In perpetual contracts, basis determines how attractive a position is relative to spot trading.

Breadth (market breadth) — The percentage of assets in a market that are rising (up) versus falling (down) on a given day. High breadth (70%+ up) suggests broad strength; low breadth suggests a rally driven by a few assets.

Collateral — Assets pledged by a trader as security against a loan or leverage. If the asset's value falls too much, the position is liquidated.

Funding rate — The periodic cost (or payment) that holders of long (bullish) or short (bearish) positions pay to each other, designed to pull the perpetual price toward the spot price. High positive rates favor short sellers; negative rates favor long holders. Rates vary by exchange.

Leverage — Borrowed funds used to increase the size of a trade or position beyond what a trader's own capital allows, amplifying both gains and losses.

Liquidation — Forced closure of a leveraged position when collateral drops below a threshold, triggering an automatic sale at whatever price the market will accept.

Long (long position) — A bet that an asset's price will rise. A 'long' or 'bullish' trader profits if the price goes up.

Long-short ratio — The ratio of long positions to short positions among all traders on an exchange or in a trading account. A ratio above 1 means more bullish bets; below 1 means more bearish bets.

Mark price — The current reference price used for perpetual contracts, often a weighted average of prices across major spot and futures markets, used for calculating collateral and liquidation.

Open interest (OI) — The total number of open long and short positions on a perpetual contract or futures exchange. Rising OI suggests growing confidence or speculation; falling OI suggests traders closing positions.

Open-interest change — The percentage change in open interest over a time period (typically one day). Positive change = new positions or leverage increasing; negative change = positions closing or leverage unwinding.

Perpetual contract (perpetual futures) — A derivatives contract that mimics a spot market but allows leverage, with no expiration date. The price is kept close to the spot price via the funding mechanism.

Short (short position) — A bet that an asset's price will fall. A 'short' or 'bearish' trader profits if the price goes down.

Taker buy-sell ratio — The ratio of aggressive buy orders (takers) to sell orders (takers) on an exchange. Above 1 = more aggressive buying; below 1 = more aggressive selling. Reflects immediate market sentiment.

Top-trader position ratio (top position ratio) — The ratio of long to short positions among the largest traders on an exchange, independent of retail sentiment. Shows where big money is betting.
