All five major venues (Binance, Bybit, OKX, Bitget, Gate) agreed closely on Bitcoin near $85,700 at day's end and Ethereum near $2,709. Binance led by volume, with $13.1 billion in Bitcoin trades and $7.6 billion in Ethereum—roughly twice the next-largest venues.

02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way. Top L/S is the ratio among the largest traders. Taker B/S is the buy-to-sell ratio of market orders.

Funding, open interest and mark price are point-in-time (as of 00:17 UTC), not daily figures.

Bitcoin showed mixed signals: the funding rate turned negative at -2.37% per year, meaning large traders thought the market was overheating and started betting against further gains. Open interest fell 4.1%, pointing to some liquidations and position unwinding. Yet the biggest traders remained long-biased at a 1.81-to-1 ratio, and more coins bought than sold. Ethereum had brighter positioning: positive funding at 2.16% yearly (longs still eager), strong large-trader long bias at 2.48-to-1, and more aggressive buying than selling. Across all Binance perps, just 48% of coins traded up—a slight bearish lean but nothing alarming.

US stocks gained ground: the S&P 500 rose 0.67% and the Nasdaq 1.15%, with the dollar strengthening 0.35% and bond yields rising. In Asia, South Korea's markets opened Monday and saw mixed results—SK Hynix fell 1.71%, while smaller names like Hanmi and LG Electronics climbed 3%+ as semiconductor stocks rotated. Hong Kong also traded Monday and saw outsized AI-stock moves, with Zhipu AI gaining 8.74% and MiniMax up 3%. China's markets were closed for National Day holiday, so the small China-listed perp moves visible in trading data do not reflect real stock movement.

THE THREE THAT MATTERED MOST

CFTC proposes sweeping crypto trading and exchange rules (Regulation CTX and CAM)

The U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission issued a formal advance notice on October 5, proposing two new regulations to govern crypto trading and exchanges. Regulation CTX would cover retail trades with leverage or margin, while Regulation CAM would create a new category of regulated crypto exchange. This marks the first comprehensive federal framework for leverage trading and comes after Congress stalled on market-structure legislation. A 60-day public comment period will inform the final rules.

Treasury withdraws proposed crypto wallet and mixer surveillance rules

The U.S. Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) withdrew two controversial proposals on October 5: one that would require reporting on transactions over $3,000 to unhosted (self-custody) wallets, and another designating crypto mixers as a money-laundering concern. Both withdrawals cite concerns about a chilling effect on legitimate activity, aligning with the White House's July 2025 digital asset report. The administration said it will continue monitoring for illicit use.

SEC approves first 3x leveraged Bitcoin and Ethereum ETFs for retail trading

The Securities and Exchange Commission approved a listing rule on October 2 allowing six 3x leveraged exchange-traded funds (ETFs) from Volatility Shares covering Bitcoin, Ethereum, gold, silver, oil, and natural gas. The funds use CME futures contracts rather than holding actual coins, targeting short-term traders who bet triple the daily price move. This approval opens a new product category for retail leverage in crypto, though funds must still obtain final SEC registration before trading begins.

ETF FLOWS

US spot Bitcoin ETFs saw net inflows of $189.9 million on October 2, following $102.7 million on October 1. The week of September 28–October 2 tallied $82.9 million of net inflows, a dramatic slowdown from the prior week's $2.39 billion. US Ethereum ETFs experienced $118 million of net outflows during September 29–October 1 after a strong $689.8 million inflow week earlier, signaling a sentiment reversal following the late-September rally.

Every term used today, in plain words

Funding rate — The interest rate that traders holding perpetual futures contracts (leveraged positions) pay each other. Positive rates mean traders betting on price rises pay those betting on drops; negative rates mean the reverse. Extreme funding signals overleveraged bets.

Liquidation — Forced sale of a losing futures position when a trader's account drops below the minimum required margin. Liquidations cascade downward as stop-losses trigger.

Long/short ratio — A comparison of how many traders are betting prices will go up (long) versus down (short). A ratio above 1 means more longs; below 1 means more shorts. Extreme ratios can signal overconfidence.

Mark price — The price used to calculate profits and losses on futures contracts. It's typically close to the spot (cash) price but can differ when trading is one-sided or illiquid.

Market breadth — The percentage of all cryptocurrencies on an exchange that went up on the day. High breadth (70%+) signals broad bullish sentiment; low breadth (below 40%) signals broad weakness.

Open interest — The total number of open contracts (unfilled positions) in the futures markets. A sharp drop signals traders closing out bets or getting liquidated (forced to exit losing positions).

Perpetual futures — Leveraged derivative contracts with no expiration date, settling continuously rather than on a fixed date. They allow traders to bet on price moves with borrowed money.

Taker buy/sell ratio — Tracks who is more aggressive: buyers who place market orders to buy immediately (takers), or sellers who do the same. A ratio above 1 means more aggressive buying pressure.

Top-trader position ratio — The long-to-short balance specifically among the largest accounts (not all traders). Tracks what the biggest players are doing—often more reliable than the overall market.
