01 · PRICE & VOLUME

What every venue's price and volume did

The same two contracts on every exchange, for this UTC day. When the prices line up, nothing unusual is happening; a gap or a big volume difference is worth noticing.

02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way.

Gate	+10.8%	$3.06B	—	—	$2,753.43

Funding, open interest and mark price are point-in-time (as of 02:00 UTC), not daily figures.

Funding rates showed sharp divides: Bitcoin ranged from 1.86% annualized at Bitget to 7.68% at Bybit, while Ethereum rates clustered around 10%–11%, signaling strong bullish sentiment with lenders charging premium rates. Open interest declined on most venues (Binance BTC down 2.74%, Bybit ETH down 5.66%), indicating traders reduced leveraged positions. Long-to-short ratios showed mixed signals: Bitcoin traders were slightly short-biased (0.90–0.95 on major venues), while Ethereum longs dominated (2.41 on Binance, 1.16 on OKX).

CFTC warns 'mention market' prediction contracts pose heightened manipulation risk

The U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission issued an official advisory on September 22 flagging that prediction market contracts betting on whether someone will 'mention' specific words or attend events face significant manipulation risk. The agency states these contracts settle on behavior that is 'neither independently generated nor externally verifiable,' creating conditions for cheating. The warning comes after the CFTC fined a former White House teleprompter operator over $107,000 for trading prediction contracts tied to presidential speeches.

White House and Treasury say crypto market structure work falls to regulators, not Congress

White House and U.S. Treasury officials stated that despite hope the lame-duck Congressional session might revisit the crypto Clarity Act before January 2027, the real work on market standards and custody rules must proceed through regulatory channels. The CFTC and SEC are taking the lead on rules that don't require legislative approval.

— 07 · GLOSSARY

Every term used today, in plain words

Funding rate — The interest rate that traders on perpetual contracts (futures that don't expire) pay or receive to hold positions. A positive rate means longs pay shorts; this indicates most traders are bullish and willing to pay a premium to hold positions. High rates suggest overbought conditions; low or negative rates suggest oversold conditions. Rates reset every 8 hours on major exchanges.

Long — A bet that the price will go up. A trader who is 'long' owns an asset or holds a contract that profits if price rises.

Long-to-short ratio — The proportion of traders betting up (long) versus those betting down (short). A ratio of 2.0 means twice as many traders are betting up as down. A ratio below 1.0 means more traders are betting down than up. Higher ratios = more bullish sentiment; lower ratios = more bearish.

Mark price — The reference price used to settle perpetual contracts and calculate account values. It is typically the median of prices across major exchanges, updated frequently, and resists extreme manipulation better than the 'last trade' price.

Open interest — The total dollar amount of all unfilled contracts (leverage positions) at an exchange. When open interest rises, traders are adding new positions and increasing risk; when it falls, they are closing or taking profit. Open interest changes indicate how traders are repositioning.

Open interest change — The percentage increase or decrease in total open interest over a period (usually one day). A negative change means traders reduced positions; a positive change means they added positions. This reflects appetite for leverage.

Perpetual contract — A type of futures contract that does not expire. Traders can hold positions indefinitely, with interest (funding rate) exchanged every 8 hours to keep the price in line with the spot market. Also called 'perps'.

Short — A bet that the price will go down. A trader who is 'short' holds a contract that profits if price falls.

Venue — An exchange where crypto is traded. Examples include Binance, Bybit, OKX, Bitget, and Gate.io. Prices and conditions can differ slightly between venues due to local demand and liquidity.

Volume — The total dollar amount of trades executed in a given period. High volume indicates active trading and deep liquidity; low volume can mean wide bid-ask spreads and slippage.
