02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way. Top L/S is the ratio among the largest traders. Taker B/S is the buy-to-sell ratio of market orders.

Funding, open interest and mark price are point-in-time (as of 01:00 UTC), not daily figures.

Traders maintained a bullish lean: Bitcoin open interest rose 0.55% with funding rates positive at Binance (3.81% annualized) despite negative funding at Bybit (-4.87%), and long positions outnumbered shorts at 1.87-to-1 overall, with the largest traders even more bullish at 1.65-to-1. Ethereum showed stronger bullish positioning at 3.36-to-1 long-to-short with open interest rising 0.86%, though top traders were at 1.69-to-1. Both assets showed modest selling pressure via taker ratios (BTC 0.92, ETH 0.93, both below 1.0). Market breadth was strong: 82% of all Binance perpetual contracts were up on the day. Sentiment shifted slightly from the previous day's Greed (64) to still-Greed (59), indicating mild risk-off mood.

THE THREE THAT MATTERED MOST

Ledger investigates $72–90 million hardware wallet theft tied to Southeast Asian reseller

Blockchain investigators estimate $72–90 million in suspected crypto thefts from Ledger hardware wallet buyers who purchased devices from reseller CryptoBilis in Southeast Asia. Ledger disclosed the incident on October 9 and is investigating whether devices were counterfeit, physically tampered with, or compromised through another method. The incident highlights the supply-chain risk of purchasing hardware wallets through unauthorized or reseller channels.

Tether freezes ~$1.45 million in THORChain TRON vaults for approximately 27 minutes

Tether blocklisted four of THORChain's six TRON vaults on October 9, temporarily halting the platform's TRON trading and causing approximately $363,000 in payouts to queue. The freeze lasted roughly 27 minutes before addresses were unfrozen. The incident illustrates that while THORChain distributes transaction-signing authority across validator nodes, issuer Tether retains the ability to freeze stablecoins unilaterally, raising concerns about centralized control over supposedly decentralized infrastructure.

CFTC proposes rule to classify prediction market event contracts as swaps under federal oversight

The US Commodity Futures Trading Commission issued an interim final rule on October 9 that immediately takes effect, and proposed a formal rule with a 30-day comment period to classify 'event contracts' (including sports, politics, culture, and weather predictions) as swaps subject to CFTC oversight. The move aims to establish exclusive federal authority over prediction market platforms like Kalshi and Polymarket, removing state gambling regulators from jurisdiction. The announcement comes amid ongoing legal disputes between the CFTC and states over regulatory authority.

Blockchain.com seeks CFTC approval to operate regulated US prediction markets and crypto derivatives

Blockchain.com applied to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission for Designated Contract Market (DCM) and Futures Commission Merchant (FCM) licenses, which would enable the company to run its own regulated prediction market and derivatives platform in the US. Currently, Blockchain.com offers prediction market services internationally through partnerships with Polymarket and Hyperliquid. The approval would allow domestic retail and institutional access.

Every term used today, in plain words

Blocklisted — Added to a blacklist so that a cryptocurrency issuer (like Tether) can prevent transfers from those addresses, effectively freezing the funds held there.

Designated Contract Market (DCM) — A regulated US futures exchange licensed by the CFTC to offer futures contracts and event contracts to the public.

ETF (Exchange-traded fund) — An investment fund traded on a stock exchange that tracks an asset or index (in this case, Bitcoin or Ethereum).

Funding rate — A periodic payment between traders holding long and short positions in perpetual futures contracts; positive rates mean longs pay shorts, negative rates mean shorts pay longs. Annualized funding expresses this as a yearly percentage.

Futures Commission Merchant (FCM) — A US firm licensed by the CFTC to act as a broker, handling customer funds and risk management for derivatives trading.

Hardware wallet — A physical device (like a USB drive) used to securely store and manage cryptocurrency private keys offline, reducing hacking risk compared to online storage.

Long-to-short ratio — The proportion of traders holding bullish (long) positions versus bearish (short) positions in a market. Above 1.0 means more longs; below 1.0 means more shorts.

Mark price — The price used by futures exchanges to calculate unrealized gains and losses and to determine when to liquidate underfunded positions. Usually follows the underlying asset's spot price closely.

Market breadth — The percentage of assets in a market that went up (or down) on a given day, showing whether gains/losses were broad-based or concentrated in a few assets.

Net inflow / Net outflow — The total amount of money flowing into (inflow) or out of (outflow) an investment product like an ETF on a given day.

Open interest — The total value of all outstanding futures contracts in a market, measured in either coins or USD. An increase signals growing leverage and conviction; a decrease signals positions closing.

Reseller — A company authorized by a manufacturer to sell its products to end customers, typically for distribution in a specific geographic region.

Spot ETF — An ETF that holds the actual underlying asset (Bitcoin or Ethereum coins) directly rather than futures contracts, allowing investors to own the crypto without managing wallets.

Stablecoin — A cryptocurrency designed to maintain a stable price, usually pegged to a real-world asset like the US dollar (e.g., USDT or USDC).

Swap — In regulatory terms, a derivatives contract between two parties where payments are exchanged based on price movements of an underlying asset. Under CFTC rules, swaps require specific licenses to trade.

Taker buy/sell ratio — A ratio comparing the volume of aggressive buy orders (takers) to aggressive sell orders. Above 1.0 means more buying pressure; below 1.0 means more selling pressure.
