THE DAY IN ONE LINE

Weak U.S. jobs data (29,000 added vs. 90,000 forecast) triggered a sharp relief rally that pushed Bitcoin intraday to $87,200, but gains faded as Treasury yields recovered, leaving both Bitcoin and Ethereum down modestly on the day.

02 · POSITIONING

How traders were leaning

Funding shows which side is paying to hold its position (positive = longs pay shorts). Open interest is how much money is in open bets; its change over the day shows money coming in or out. Long/short is how many accounts lean each way. Top L/S is the ratio among the largest traders. Taker B/S is the buy-to-sell ratio of market orders.

Funding, open interest and mark price are point-in-time (as of 00:00 UTC), not daily figures.

Futures positioning was bullish on paper but selling pressure emerged during the day. Bitcoin funding rates stayed positive (+5.01% annualized at Binance, +10.95% at Bitget/Bybit), and the top 1% of Bitcoin traders held 1.90× more long than short positions—strongly bullish. Ethereum's top traders favored longs at 1.50× ratio, with lower funding (+1.64% at Binance). However, open interest grew significantly (up $2.3 billion for Bitcoin), yet taker buy/sell ratios fell below 1 for both (0.983 BTC, 0.977 ETH), meaning aggressive sellers slightly outpaced aggressive buyers. Breadth deteriorated: only 44.3% of Binance perpetuals traded up on the day, a bearish signal that large traders built bullish leverage while most alts weakened.

Asian markets diverged sharply on October 2. South Korea's tech-heavy session opened strong: SK Hynix +1.79%, Samsung +2.815%, LG +1.97%—chip makers rallying on softer U.S. rate expectations from the weak jobs data. Hong Kong's session weakened: AI-focused stocks fell (Zhipu AI -3.36%, MiniMax -5.13%), and Xiaomi (1810) dropped 4.04%—likely Chinese tech weakness from National Day holiday closures (China's mainland markets were closed Oct 1–7 for holidays). U.S. equities rallied on the weak jobs print: S&P 500 +0.74%, Nasdaq +1.14% (tech outperformed on rate-cut hopes). Commodities declined: crude oil (WTI) -1.84%, gold -0.09%, silver -1.10%.

What drove the market — and what didn't

Only causes that move prices, each with its source. Rumours and unconfirmed reports are kept separate at the end.

THE THREE THAT MATTERED MOST

U.S. added just 29,000 jobs in September; unemployment ticks to 4.2%

The U.S. employment report released at 12:30 UTC on October 2 showed only 29,000 jobs added in September—far below the 90,000 expected and previous 162,000. Unemployment rose to 4.2%. This weak labor data typically signals lower odds of Fed rate hikes, a tailwind for risk assets and crypto in the near term. Bond yields fell sharply on the news, and Bitcoin rallied intraday to $87,200 before fading.

Blast Ethereum layer-2 shuts down after costs exceed revenue; users have until Oct. 26 to withdraw

Blast, once a $2.3B Ethereum layer-2 network backed by Paradigm, announced it is winding down operations because costs now exceed revenue with no viable path to economic sustainability. Users have until October 26 to withdraw assets through the normal Blast interface; after that, withdrawals are still possible via direct contract interaction on Ethereum L1. The move marks a pullback in layer-2 diversity as larger platforms like Coinbase and Robinhood build competing networks.

Bitcoin clears $85,000 sell wall; traders position for $100,000 target as leverage builds

Bitcoin cleared significant sell-side liquidity at $85,000 and briefly touched $87,200 during October 2 trading, buoyed by the weak jobs data. Open interest jumped $2.3 billion, and traders report shifting bets toward a $100,000 target. The accumulation pattern mirrors post-September rallies, suggesting renewed institutional appetite despite retail breadth weakness.

Bitcoin open interest jumps $2.3B; traders build bullish leverage on weak jobs data

Perpetual futures open interest on Bitcoin rose $2.3 billion during October 2, signaling traders are deploying fresh leverage into bullish long positions. Rising open interest alongside positive funding rates indicates confidence in a near-term rally, though it also raises risk of sharp liquidations if sentiment reverses.

REST OF THE WEEK

Mon 05 Oct	US ISM Services PMI October 2026	14:00
Wed 07 Oct	FOMC Minutes October 2026	18:00

Every term used today, in plain words

Basis — The time period a price change is measured over. 'UTC-day' means the change from 00:00 to 23:59 UTC on that calendar day.

Breadth — The percentage of cryptocurrencies on an exchange that traded up (vs. down) during a time period. High breadth (above 50%) means most crypto moved together in the same direction. Low breadth (below 50%) means the market was divided, often a bearish sign.

Funding rate — A regular fee that long-position holders (traders betting price up) pay to short-position holders (traders betting price down) in perpetual futures contracts. Positive funding means longs pay shorts, signaling more bullish sentiment. Funding is expressed as an annual percentage (e.g., 5% annualized means 5% per year). Higher funding rates indicate stronger bullish bias among traders.

Long/short ratio — The ratio of open long positions (bets that price goes up) to short positions (bets that price goes down) on a futures exchange or account group. A ratio above 1.0 means more traders are betting on a price increase; below 1.0 means more are betting on a decrease.

Mark price — The price used to calculate unrealized gains/losses and liquidations in perpetual futures. It is a weighted average of the last trade price and the index price (spot price across major exchanges), and it prevents manipulation by isolated trades.

Open interest — The total number of open (unsettled) futures contracts on an exchange. Rising open interest means new leverage is entering the market. Falling open interest means traders are closing positions. Open interest is often quoted in coins (e.g., 100,000 BTC) or in USD notional value.

Open-interest change — The increase or decrease in total open interest over a time period (e.g., one day). A growing open-interest change paired with rising prices usually signals bullish momentum, while growing open interest paired with falling prices can signal capitulation or overleveraged bearish positions building.

Taker buy/sell ratio — The ratio of aggressive buy orders (market buys, or 'takers' buying at the ask) to aggressive sell orders (market sells, or 'takers' selling at the bid) on an exchange. A ratio above 1.0 means more aggressive buying pressure; below 1.0 means more aggressive selling pressure.

Top-trader long/short ratio — The long-to-short position ratio among the largest traders (typically the top 1% or 5% by position size) on a futures exchange. This reveals what the most sophisticated or best-capitalized traders are betting. A high ratio (e.g., 1.9) means the biggest traders are heavily long.
